Olympic credentials, Olympic aspirations and possible Olympic performers were on display at Sunday's Old Fashioned 10 Miler (OFTM) in Foxboro. Terry Shea, who finished 61st at the men's U.S. Olympic Trials in November, won in 52:36, vanquishing the field of 427 runners. The Cambridge resident who has competed in the OFTM several times was euphoric about winning it for the first time. "I'm really psyched to win this," he said. "I come here a lot. It's nice to finally get the win."

Argentinean sensation, Claudia Camango broke the women's course record with a scintillating 57:19 which overwhelmed two women who will be competing in the U.S. women's Olympic Marathon Trials in April.

The men's race in its early stages shaped up as the most competitive in OFTM history. Many of the heads of state of New England racing were in the lead pack of 15 that curled around the Foxboro rotary through a subdued 5:30 first mile. In addition to Shea, Worcester's Mario Fraioli, Hudson's Ryan Carrara, Eric Blake of New Britain, Ct., Dan Vassallo of Brunswick, Me. and Cambridge's Adam Fitzgerald were leading the charge down South St. As the pace dropped to a 5:13 second mile, attrition took its course relocating half the pack to the rear before the third mile. Shea was still there but he wasn't in the front guard. "I wasn't feeling so good early on," he said. "I was planning on going out easier but there was the pack there so ... 'I'll just hang out with them.'"

Shea's tactics and goals were different this year than in the past. "Sometimes I've come in while I've been marathon training and more concerned about hitting a certain pace," he said. "Today I wanted to feel good early on and try to run a real hard second half, five miles negative split which was a challenge today because there was more head wind the last five miles."

The core seven (Shea, Blake, Fraioli, Carrara, Fitzgerald, Natick's Tim Tapply and Vassallo) were clustered at mid race until Shea raised the ante, bursting into a slight lead. "Once I was at the five mile mark I wanted to switch gears into race mode," Shea said. The up temp gassed all but Blake who made a valiant effort to stay with his Boston Athletic Association teammate. The sight of blue and blue running stride for stride was short lived. Shea, whose previous OFTM efforts were hampered by his marathon training, was now working against another who was now in that position. "He tried to go with me for a little over a mile," Shea said of Blake. "He's training for Boston and has a lot mileage in his legs, doing 140 miles a week. I can understand if he's a little tired."

Shea got the lead to over a hundred meters before he shot a glance over his shoulder in the last mile. "I'm really slow with the kick," he said of his sprint capabilities. "I can't pick things up too much. I was hoping that I had a big enough gap that it wouldn't be a question. I was really psyched to win. That was my goal today."

The odd thing about the women's race was that the second, third and fourth place finishers were such high caliber runners but were either unaware or disinterested in Camango's presence in the lead. Second place finisher Brett Ely (61:18) finished over four minutes back and will be on the starting line of the women's Olympic Marathon Trials in Boston in April as will fourth place finisher Caroline Bjune. The B.A.A. teammates had a different set of objectives for Sunday. "I'm going to be running in the trials in April so I have to be ready for the wind," Ely said. "I didn't even know she (Camango) was out there. I thought it was good when I saw her before the race because I knew I didn't have to worry about going for the win and losing part of my race plan. So it was a good thing that someone was way out ahead. It let me pick my own race instead of chasing her down. Overall, thumbs up for the day."

Camango, a Danbury, Ct. resident made the decision to enter the OFTM on Saturday, seeking a race of distance as a prep for the L.A. Marathon early next month. A citizen of Argentina, Camango brought sterling credentials to Foxboro, having won last year's Vancouver Marathon in 2:35. Her Vancouver time puts her in a position to represent Argentina in Beijing later this year subject to the blessing of the Argentine Olympic Committee.

Third place finisher Christy Carrara (61:28) was also oblivious to the top woman. "Today I just wanted to run another tempo race but I didn't want to race today", she said an hour after the race. "I didn't know that there was another person way way ahead at that point. I didn't know until a few seconds ago."

The 5K race was won Brian Hughes of Jamaica Plain in 16:51 and Heather Crosby of Providence's (19:20) repeated as the women's winner.
